The great Mongol conqueror Genghis Khan declared, "All cities must be destroyed so the world may once again become a great steppe in which Mongol mothers may raise free and happy children." In 1258, he reduced Baghdad to rubble, killing 800,000 people. But the rule of the Mongols eventually declined and they lost their lands to the Ottomans under Süleyman the Magnificent, by whom they were defeated. At the height of his power, Süleyman presided over a territory that spread from the deserts of North Africa to the plains of Hungary. The next three centuries saw Ottoman rule in the area, interrupted only by irregular Persian attacks on Iraq. The people of Baghdad bore the brunt of this fighting and faced starvation.

55- It is obvious from the passage that Genghis Khan

- A) wanted to capture Baghdad without much damage
- B) united with Süleyman to achieve his aim
- C) did not want cities to develop
- D) did not attack any city other than Baghdad

56- The passage implies that the destruction of Baghdad

- A) attracted the Ottomans to the area
- B) helped the Mongols to expand into North Africa
- C) meant the end of Mongol rule in the area
- D) was an application of Genghis Khan's belief
- E) angered even the Persians

57- It can be inferred from the passage that, for part of its history, Baghdad

- A) was the centre of the anti-Ottoman movement supported by Persia
- B) was in a disputed area which the Persians and Ottomans fought over
- C) was the only city that Süleyman could not conquer
- D) was the only city in the world to suffer great starvation
- E) was the capital of the Ottoman Empire

58-60. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

The most serious economic depression in the US was the appropriately named Great Depression of the 1930s. It was by far the longest-lasting and had a more devastating effect on more people than any other economic crash in US history. Its trademark was high unemployment. Barely a year after the stock market crash of 1929, unemployment was already at 8.7%, but that was just the beginning. In 1931, the rate of the jobless had risen to 15.9% and hit 23.6% in 1932. It reached its peak in 1933, when it came to 25%, which represented a total of 13 million workers who could not find work. Things began to improve slowly, but as late as 1938, the rate was still 19% and it wasn't until the start of World War II that it finally dropped back below 10%.

58- According to the passage, in American history,

- A) the Great Depression was the first time that the economy had had any problems
- B) no economic crisis has been as bad as the Great Depression
- C) there have been a lot of stock market crashes
- D) unemployment was already at record levels even before the Depression
- E) the economy had begun to have serious problems in the early 1920s

59- The passage implies that the stock market crash of 1929 in the USA

- A) was the major reason that led to the Second World War
- B) could actually have been prevented
- C) caused the stock market to be kept closed until World War II
- D) caused 8.7% of the population to lose their jobs immediately
- E) was the breaking point of the economic tension

60- We can conclude from the passage that by the year 1933,

- A) the American economy had improved considerably
- B) the effects of the Great Depression were being felt less strongly
- C) one-fourth of the US population was jobless
- D) the outbreak of a world war had become obvious
- E) almost half of the population had lost their jobs

Unknown works by well-known writers turning up unexpectedly create a story of their own, so to discover an early manuscript by as respected and well-documented a writer as Rebecca West is quite a find. In 1997 Kathryn Liang was researching the early works of West at the University of Tulsa, Oklahoma, which had bought a collection of West's papers after her death in 1986. Liang found, filed away in the correspondence section, four school notebooks written under the name of Isabel Lancashire, containing 250 pages of an unfinished novel. Liang recognised it as West's handwriting, and so the detective work began.

61- From the passage we learn about

- A) the discovery of an unknown manuscript by a famous writer
- B) a novel about an achievement
- C) the history of a collection of Kathryn Liang's papers
- D) the reasons why Rebecca West became better-known after her death
- E) the discovery of a new detective novel

- A) and Kathryn Liang are rival scholars of Rebecca West
- B) discovered the unknown manuscript before Kathryn Liang did
- C) used to work at the University of Tulsa
- D) is another name for Rebecca West
- E) sold all her works to the University of Tulsa

63- The author makes it clear that the University of Tulsa

- A) produced a number of famous novelists
- B) obtained its collection of West's works upon her death
- C) allowed Liang to take the manuscript out of the university
- D) did not know of the existence of someone named Isabel Lancashire
- E) is the best place for those interested in literary research

64-66. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

For many years, particularly in the United States, actors for leading roles were chosen primarily for their popularity and box-office appeal. They were noted as screen personalities rather than for their acting ability, and film stories were often written to suit the screen personalities of leading members of the cast. However, beginning in the 1950s in the United States, and even earlier in most European countries, acting ability became more important to most filmmakers. These filmmakers selected actors, often unknown, for their ability to portray specific roles in the film. In such films the story or the message is more important than the display of personality, and the character portrayed is more important than the actor.

64- We learn from the passage that since the 1950s, actors

- A) have had great box-office successes with their films
- B) have been free to ask for modifications in a screenplay
- C) have mostly been chosen on the basis of their acting ability
- D) have been unable to earn as much as their earlier counterparts
- E) have developed closer relationships with filmmakers

65- The author points out that popular screen personalities before the 1950s

- A) did not necessarily have to be very good at acting to get a leading role
- B) had to be both popular with the public and very good at acting
- C) also took an active part in the task of writing the screenplays
- D) usually earned more money in the United States than in Europe
- E) were not successful in acting at all

66- The change in the selection of actors for roles in a film seems to have meant that

- A) a lot of ordinary people began to seek their fortune in the film industry
- B) the characters portrayed in films were very sophisticated
- C) films did not attract as great an audience as they used to
- D) filmmakers were able to produce films on relatively small budgets
- E) unknown but talented actors had the chance to play major roles

67-69. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

In literature, an anti-hero is a central or supporting character that has some of the personality flaws and the ultimate fate that are traditionally assigned to villains, but unlike villains, anti-heroes also have enough heroic qualities or intentions to gain the sympathy of readers. Anti-heroes can be awkward, unpleasant, passive or pitiful, but they are always, in some fundamental way, failed heroes. The concept of the anti-hero has grown from a tendency of modern authors to present some failed persons as complex, even sympathetic, characters whose motivations are not inherently evil and sometimes even good. The line, therefore, between an anti-hero and a villain is not always clear-cut.

67- We learn from the passage that the anti-hero and villain in fiction

- A) are both bad characters that are always engaged in evil plots
- B) both have some pleasant features that draw the reader's sympathy
- C) usually give up their ill habits and become heroes at the end of the story
- D) share certain characteristics but the former has some likeable features
- E) are always the central characters in a novel

68- The passage tells us that the anti-hero in literature

- A) is basically evil but can be trained to be good
- B) is a character who is tightly attached to his traditions
- C) is an invention of modern times
- D) is disliked by most readers
- E) is the name given to the narrator in the novel

69- The passage makes it clear that anti-heroes

- A) are not complete failures but they see themselves so
- B) can only be seen as secondary characters
- C) combine both positive and negative characteristics in them
- D) most often escape the fate of villains
- E) can be easily distinguished from villains

Thomas Mann is the best-known German novelist of the early 1900s. He was born in Luebeck, Germany, and studied at Munich University before becoming a writer. His early masterpiece, Buddenbrooks (1901), described the decline of a family over four generations. He produced several short stories and novellas, such as Death in Venice. His second great novel, The Magic Mountain, is considered one of the greatest works of world literature. In it he shows how intellectuals think and live in the shadows of death at a Swiss tuberculosis sanatorium. Mann spent the last years of his own life in Switzerland, where he produced his greatest work, a modern version of a medieval legend, Doktor Faustus (1947).

70- From the passage, it is obvious that Thomas Mann

- A) was a German novelist better-known outside of his own country
- B) died of tuberculosis
- C) succeeded as a writer in spite of his lack of formal education
- D) wrote during the early 20th century
- E) is considered to be the world's greatest writer

71- We understand from the passage that the works of Thomas Mann

- A) are all adaptations of older legends to modern themes
- B) are all based on similar themes
- C) are all set in Switzerland
- D) cover four generations
- E) cover a variety of themes in a variety of forms

73-75. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Benin might be small and obscure, but when it does something, it does it in a big way. The people in the area established the biggest slave trade in West Africa, were members of the most powerful kingdom, have had the third-highest number of military coups in Africa — and that means a lot! — and was the only country in West Africa to wholeheartedly adopt Marxism. While Benin shares many of the problems of its neighbours, such as bad roads and infrastructure, poor water and health conditions, and institutionalised corruption, it is comparatively violence-free, is richer and economically stronger than most of its neighbours, and has the best beaches and landscapes.

73- As is pointed out in the passage, Benin

- A) is the richest country in West Africa
- B) rejected Marxism more violently than its neighbours
- C) has experienced an unusually large number of coups
- D) has a powerful king
- E) has few attractions for tourists

74- It is clear from the passage that

- A) Benin has none of the problems of its neighbours
- B) slavery is still a thriving trade in Benin
- C) violence is on the increase in Benin
- D) Benin is proud of its political record
- E) corruption is common in Benin.

75- The author of the passage wishes to express the idea that Benin

- A) is becoming overwhelmed by its problems
- B) has never recovered from the effects of the slave trade
- C) is a Marxist workers' paradise
- D) is the most corrupt country in West Africa
- E) is an interesting place in spite of some problems

Gertrude Bell was the daughter of a British family who were wealthy ironmasters, with progressive attitudes. In 1886, Bell went up to Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford, where she was the first woman to win a first-class degree in modern history. Unwanted in the marriage market — too "Oxford" a manner, it was said — she taught herself Persian and travelled to Iran in 1892, where her uncle was British ambassador. She wrote her first travel book, Persian Pictures, and translated the controversial Persian poet Hafez. She also fell in love with a penniless British diplomat, who was rejected by her father. Though she was to form passionate attachments all her life, she kept them under strict formal control.

55- According to the passage, at the time Gertrude Bell went to Oxford,

- A) her family were unable to support her financially
- B) no other woman had received a first class degree in modern history
- C) there were no other female students at the university
- D) women graduated from Oxford were popular among young men looking for wives
- E) her conservative family did not approve

56- We learn from the passage that after Gertrude Bell graduated from Oxford,

- A) she married an influential British diplomat
- B) she became British ambassador to Iran
- C) she got married and studied Persian
- D) she perfected her Persian, which she had been taught at university
- E) she learned Persian on her own before travelling to Iran

57- It is clear from the passage that as a young woman, Gertrude Bell

- A) was unable to find the right person to marry
- B) was one of the most popular writers of her time
- C) was an academic on the staff of Oxford University
- D) was more interested in travel than marriage
- E) wrote successfully about the orient without even leaving England

Settled as early as 1000 BC, Samoa was "discovered" by European explorers in the 18th century. International rivalries in the latter half of the 19th century were settled by an 1899 treaty in which Germany and the US divided up the Samoan islands. The US formally occupied its portion — a smaller group of eastern islands with the excellent harbour of Pago Pago — the following year. New Zealand occupied the German territory of Western Samoa at the outbreak of World War I in 1914. It continued to administer the islands until 1962, when Western Samoa became the first Polynesian nation to re-establish independence in the 20th century. The country dropped the "Western" from its name in 1997.

58- It is pointed out in the passage that Samoa

- A) was uninhabited until the 18th century
- B) consists of two islands
- C) has been part of New Zealand since 1914
- D) was divided between the US and Germany towards the end of the 19th century
- E) took part in World War I on the side of Germany

59- It is clear from the passage that during World War I, Western Samoa

- A) was the scene of the bloodiest battles in the war
- B) became a colony of New Zealand rather than Germany
- C) gained its independence
- D) was supported by the United States
- E) allowed its harbour Pago Pago to be used by the Allies

60- By the way he uses the word "discovered", the author seems to imply that

- A) it was thanks to the West that primitive tribes were civilised
- B) the Samoan islands were actually uninhabited when Europeans reached there
- C) the Samoan islands were already known to New Zealanders
- D) it was the settlers from New Zealand that first peopled the Samoan islands
- E) he finds it strange that an already inhabited place should be discovered

Interestingly, studies about happiness levels show that while people on very low incomes become significantly happier when their earnings rise, once they reach a quite modest level of income — as little as $10,000 a year — further increases in earnings bring very little extra happiness. As for individuals, so for nations. Yes, people in rich countries report higher levels of happiness than those in poor ones. But once countries reach a certain level of economic development — roughly the stage Britain reached in the "you've never had it so good" era of the 1950s — further increases in national wealth make very little difference. In fact, happiness can even decline.

61- From the passage, we learn about

- A) how wealth does not necessarily equal happiness
- B) why people with the most money are the happiest
- C) the easiest way to earn $10,000 a year
- D) the reasons why people want to get rich
- E) the best ways to achieve greater happiness

62- The author emphasises that people's reaction to pay-rise differs depending on

- A) their psychological state
- B) their expectations from life
- C) their level of income
- D) which country they live in
- E) their occupations

63- From the passage, it is obvious that people who live in the richest countries

- A) would much rather live in poorer countries
- B) have the highest levels of happiness in the world
- C) are not necessarily happier than those living in moderately wealthy countries
- D) feel much happier the richer their country becomes
- E) do not feel sorry for people who live in poverty

The declaration of war by the Bangladesh government against Dhaka's huge mosquito population is likely to be welcomed by most of the city's hard-pressed residents. The insects are found everywhere, from the homes of the wealthiest to those of the poorest. Although Dhaka isn't an area where malaria is common, mosquitoes are responsible for frequent outbreaks of dengue fever. Air force planes and helicopters will now, for the first time, be adapted so that they can carry anti-mosquito spray. The aim is to accomplish the project in advance of the monsoon period, which begins in late June, to avoid being hindered. Areas where there is stagnant water will be especially targeted.

64- From the passage, we learn that Dhaka's huge mosquito population

- A) is likely to be welcomed by most of the city's hard-pressed residents
- B) is mainly to be found in the homes of the city's poor people
- C) is an irritant rather than a health danger
- D) is responsible for Dhaka's frequent outbreaks of malaria
- E) is soon to be attacked by the government of Bangladesh

65- We understand from the passage that military airplanes and helicopters

- A) are to be used during the monsoon season
- B) have previously been used to kill mosquitoes
- C) will probably kill many civilians in Dhaka
- D) will be used for a humanitarian purpose
- E) are often used for non-military tasks in Bangladesh

66- We can infer from the passage that the monsoon period

- A) is not suitable for carrying out the project
- B) is the best time to start the fight against mosquitoes
- C) is a busy period from the point of military actions
- D) is the time when there is a huge increase in mosquito population
- E) will hinder the natural growth of the mosquito population

Although he was born in Kingston-upon-Thames near London in 1830, the son of a grain and coal merchant, Eadweard Muybridge made his reputation in America. Emigrating from England aged 21, he took up the camera after unsatisfactory jobs as bookseller, dog breeder and moneylender. By 1872, his reputation was growing as a landscape photographer. The same year, he was hired by the railroad boss Leland Stanford, who claimed, in an argument, that a horse had all four feet simultaneously off the ground at one phase of a trot. By devising a new technique for photographing, Muybridge proved Stanford right. After this experiment with horses, Muybridge devoted the rest of his life to similar photographic studies of motion that are still useful to artists and physiologists alike.

70- It is clear from the passage that the experiment asked for by Stanford

READING COMPREHENSION PASSAGES

1. BLOOD, SWEAT and TEARS

Blood, Sweat and Tears is an American musical group. A pioneer in the field of jazz rock, the group topped the charts in the late 1960s with their fresh sound.

The idea for the group was conceived by Al Kooper, a keyboard player and vocalist who had previously been a member of the Royal Teens and the Blues Project. He wanted to form a band that would expand the scope of rock to include elements of jazz, blues, classical and folk music. The core of the original group included Kooper, Blues Project guitarist Steve Katz, drummer Bobby Colomby and bassist Jim Fielder.

Blood, Sweat and Tears added numerous horn players from New York jazz and studio bands before releasing the moderately successful debut album Child is Father to the Man in 1968. It included various Kooper compositions as well as songs by Randy Newman, Carole King and others.

Several members, including Kooper, left to pursue other interests after the first album. The band regrouped with David Clayton-Thomas, formerly in the Canadian blues band The Bossmen, as the lead vocalist. The 1969 Grammy-winning album Blood, Sweat and Tears spent more than two years on the United States charts, including seven successive weeks at number one. The group also achieved worldwide recognition, and the US State Department asked the band to do a good will tour abroad.

In the early 1970s, the band had hits with 'Hi-De-Ho', 'Lucretia MacEvil' and 'Go Down Gamblin'. A series of singers replaced Clayton-Thomas when he left to pursue a solo career, but he rejoined the group in 1974. With the emergence of other rock bands with a similar emphasis on brass, the group had trouble duplicating its recording success but became popular on the nightclub circuit. Through the years, more than forty musicians filled the positions of the eight-to-ten-member band.

2. A LONGING for THE PAST

The Goldman Environmental Prize is the world's largest award for grass-roots activism and environmental achievement. The recipients — and there have been a total of 94 of them since the prize was launched in 1989 — hail from every region of the globe.

Among the profiles of the 2003 award winners is Odigha Odigha, a Nigerian forest activist and educator.

Odigha Odigha recalls what it was like as a child to walk to school under the canopy of the rainforest in Cross River State in southeastern Nigeria.

"You could walk several kilometres without seeing the sun's rays," he says. "You would only hear the sounds of animals, birds and see wonderful butterflies, and come in close contact with nature, run around and pluck some leaves and fruits. As an adventurous kid, I used to enjoy it so much. And, at that time, you could get into fresh water, which was so fresh that you could drink it."

The rainforest was a paradise in the eyes of the young boy. It had vast stands of hardwoods and was home to the world's endangered gorillas. But 40 years later, the rainforest in Cross River State has become a much different place.

"What we have now is a vast desert encroachment coming in from the north, coming towards the coastal area," Mr Odigha says. "The trees have gone, trees like mahogany, ebony.

It is a pathetic situation. I am not sure that we have fully come to terms with what we are losing, what is happening to us as a country."

A century of excessive and largely unchecked logging has had devastating consequences, says Mr Odigha, "and today less than 10 percent of Nigeria's original rainforest survives."

3. CHANGING TRENDS in AUTO COLOUR

All the colours of the rainbow, and some shades not found in nature are the choices offered Americans buying new cars these days. The auto industry has come a long way from the early 20th century, when Henry Ford offered his Model-T in one "flavour": black.

Silver and its variations are, by far, the most popular exterior finish for new cars in North America, South America and Europe, accounting for 23 percent of new vehicles sold. Bob Daily, colour marketing manager for the major auto paint producer Dupont Performance Coatings, explains why. "Silver is really a very stylish-looking colour. I think, it's what people equate to things like precision and performance," he says.

Mr Daily says silver goes well with the new car designs. "We're getting away from that "carved bar of soap" design that we had in the 1980s and 90s into more chiseled looks. Those kinds of designs are enhanced by colours like silver, as well as black and some of the other colours that are quite popular right now," he says.

Black is currently number three in popularity. What's second to silver? "White has been a perennially popular colour. But, surprisingly, over the past five or six years, black has come up considerably in popularity," says Mr Daily.

As one colour fades, another is on the rise, according to Mr Daily. "When green became popular in the early 1990s, blue dropped off the market for quite a while. And now blue is coming back," he says.

"Just a few years ago," says Bob Daily, "there were clear differences in colours chosen by car buyers in Asia, Europe and North America. Now, with the advent of the global society and instant communication, those cultural differences are disappearing. And silver is the dominant choice from Berlin to Beijing."

4. TOURISM

Tourism is travelling for recreation.

The tourist originated when large numbers of middle-class people began to join aristocratic travellers. As societies became wealthier, and people longer-lived, it became highly likely that lower-middle and middle-class people steadily employed would retire in good health and with significant savings.

A tourist can usually be seen as clearly "out of place" with his current surroundings, so he is not confused with other travellers. The term tourist is tied to the activity of taking a tour or sightseeing. It is not limited to travelling, but used as a description of a person who enters a situation or culture, for a brief time, requiring knowledge that he does not have. The tourist can be interested — among other things — in the new place's culture or its nature. Wealthy people have always travelled to distant parts of the world, not incidentally to some other purpose, but as an end in itself: to see great buildings or other works of art; to learn new languages; or to taste new cuisines.

Organised tourism is now a major industry around the world. Many national economies are now heavily reliant on tourism.

The term tourism is sometimes used in an uncomplimentary manner, implying a shallow interest by tourists in general in the societies and natural wonders they visit.

5. THE MADRID METRO

The Madrid metro is the large metro system serving Madrid, the capital of Spain. It is one of the largest metro systems in the world, which is especially remarkable considering Madrid's less than four million population. It is also one of the fastest growing in the world, rivalled only by Seoul; the latest round of expansions, completed in the spring of 2003, have increased its length to 223 kilometres.

The metro opened in 1919 under the direction of the Compañía de Metro Alfonso XIII. Metro stations served as air raid shelters during the Spanish Civil War.

Starting in the 1970s, it was sequentially greatly expanded to cope with the influx of population and urban sprawl from Madrid's economic ascendancy. A huge project in the late 1990s and early 2000s installed approximately 50 kilometres of new metro tunnels, including a direct connection between downtown Madrid and Barajas International Airport (line 8), and service to outlying areas, including a huge 40-kilometre circuit called Metrosur (line 12) serving Madrid's southern suburbs.

Metrosur, the largest civil engineering project in Europe, opened on April 11, 2003. It includes 40.7 kilometres of tunnel and 28 new stations, including an interchange station and an additional station on Line 10, which connects it to downtown. Construction began in June 2000, the whole circuit was completed in less than three years. It connects the towns of Getafe, Móstoles, Alcorcón, Fuenlabrada and Leganés.

Madrid also has an extensive commuter train network operated by Renfe, the national rail line, which is integrated with the metro network. Several commuter train transfer stations were included in Metrosur.
